Putting Intent Into Ohio's Employment Intentional Tort

For decades, Ohio's employment "intentional tort" claim wasn't really intentional. Rather, the General Assembly and the Supreme Court kicked various iterations and interpretations back and forth, all of which involved some form of intent, but not actual specific intent. In 2005, the General Assembly rewrote R.C. 2745.01 to change the game to be one of actual intent. The Supreme Court of Ohio has emphatically supported - and enforced - that change while some lower courts apply some version of the old law. This webinar will review the current state of this important claim, discuss recent decisions interpreting it, and examine strategic considerations for bringing and defending the claim.
